Impacts of COVID-19 on sex workers’ financial security & access to community services

During the first year of the COVID-19 pandemic, >200 Vancouver-based sex workers answered survey questions about potential changes faced in working conditions, income, food security, and access to services during the pandemic, as part of the AESHA study.

What did we find?

Impacts on financial security

- 1 in 2 sex workers reported negative changes to food security
- 1 in 2 sex workers were not able to access government income supports (e.g., CERB)
- Indigenous sex workers were 45% less likely to access income supports
- 72% reported reduced income from in-person sex work

Interruptions in service access

- 19% reported interruptions in access to sex work community services due to pandemic restrictions (e.g., closures or reduced hours)
- 7% reported changes in working conditions, such as increased client coercion or heightened workplace violence
- 4x increased odds of changes in working conditions due to interrupted access to community services

AESHA (An Evaluation of Sex Workers’ Health Access) is a long-standing, community-based research project housed at the Centre for Gender & Sexual Health Equity at UBC in Vancouver, BC. AESHA includes > 900 sex workers across outdoor and indoor venues, with Indigenous, racialized and im/migrant sex workers overrepresented among participants. The current findings are based on research with ~ 200 AESHA participants who completed COVID-19 questionnaires between April 2020 and April 2021.
Who did we ask?

| | |
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Indigenous</td>
<td>53%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White</td>
<td>40%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Women of colour*</td>
<td>7%</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

*Asian, Southeast Asian, or Black

Calls to action

To promote sex workers’ health, safety and dignity during a global pandemic and beyond, this research suggests the need for:

- Full decriminalization of sex work to improve access to income supports & labour protections
- Sustainable funding for sex worker-led organizations & services
- A basic income for all to promote better working conditions
